Description

37.5 x 29 x .4 cm

The panels assigned inventory numbers 55.58, showing the Vir Dolorum with an angel, and 55.59, depicting the Crucifixion, belonged together. Both are slightly trimmed, which is why their identical dimensions are not absolute proof that the two works comprised the recto and verso of a two-sided panel. However, the wood examination that was a part of Dóra Sallay's research clearly showed that the paintings indeed formed the two sides of a panel that was later sawed in two, with each work then trimmed. Both paintings were affixed to new supports.

The earlier literature is divided on the question of whether the panels originally formed one wing of a diptych.

Proveniencia

In 1933 the museum purchased the panels. According to the record, the panel 'supposedly' came from the Roman Catholic church of Telkibánya.

Restaurálás

Lajos Nikássy, 1933. We have no information on when the panels were sawed apart and trimmed.
